Dedication

In loving memory of two wonderful dogs,

Dynamite and Nena

Dear reader,

Don't we just love our pets!

They play with us, they make us laugh, and best of all, they give us love and affection when we need it. They help to make our lives less lonely and more useful.

Most pet owners often talk to their beloved pets (I know I did with my two dogs.) We tell them our secrets, our deepest fears and hopes, and we whisper loving words to them.

But many of us also wonder what is really going on the heads of our animal friends. What can they be thinking or feeling? What makes them happy? Or sad? What do they really think of us? What might they say to us if they could speak? Now's the time to find out with help from this book.

You can answer those questions by writing on the pages that follow. They encourage you to jot down thoughts for pets, to write the things that you might want to hear them say and the conversations you'd like to have with each other. To help you, there are prompts at the top of each page which offer different ideas of what to write about and what you might want to hear your own pet tell you. These might be serious things or funny ones, or even some secrets which surprise you.

All you have to do is allow your imagination to roam freely as you write words in the blank talk balloons that come from your heart and that of your beloved pets. This book aims to make your day a little brighter, a little lighter and hopefully funnierit's just that simple.

Sincerely,

Bill 7immerman

(Here's an example: There will be days ahead when you feel like howling or mewing, and others when you simply will bark or purr for joy. Accept them all. (Or: Be cautious! Be alert! TOM BLOOM is an artist who has had four cats, cohabitating with as many as three at one time. However, at no time has he ever thought of himself as a feline, so it would be difficult for furry little paws to draw funny little pictures for The New York Times and the many books he worked on with Bill. He is also very fond of the occasional catnap. With respect to canines, Tom has worked doggedly for many years drawing in a fetching style. He has received all shots, is good with kids, and has never bitten anyone.
